

MONARCH SYSTEMS GLOBAL HEALTHCARE
PRESS RELEASE

BALTIMORE, MD – June 8, 2010 -- The launch of the Susan G. Komen for the Cure Global Health Alliance was kicked off by a roundtable session at the Canadian Embassy on June 8 2010. The event brought together U.S. Policymakers, health and finance ministers from over 40 countries, officials from the World Bank, the head of the World Health Organization (WHO), UNAIDS and The Global Fund. We are very honored that The Komen Global Health Alliance (KGHA)—which focuses on U.S. public-private partnerships to improve women’s health around the world—invited Monarch team members to attend the roundtable session and the celebratory dinner following.

The American Institute of Architects Academy of Architecture for Health (AIA/AAH) also prepared a statement of support that was delivered by Rolf Haarstad to SGKFTC. Here is text of that message:

“The AIA/AAH wishes to congratulate and thank The Komen Global Health Alliance for continuing to push for improved women’s health services around the world. Improving both access to healthcare and the quality of that care received are some of the most crucial topics on the table today as our world continues to be drawn closer. Public-private partnerships have been shown to be an efficient model to effectively bring health care to the people of developing countries, improving the health of the people in that region while addressing the quality of life for the people on our planet..... We’re all connected.”
